Audio Visual Tech

Audio visual technicians install, maintain and operate various types of equipment and technology that is used to enhance sound and visual imagery. From rock concerts to convention halls, as well as everything in between, these techs make everything sound and look better at either an indoor or outdoor event. An interest in technology is a must, so too are patience and very solid communication skills. Since audio visual technicians often work behind the scenes, their work schedules tend to involve evening and weekend hours.

Technical Sales Rep

Technical sales representatives sell specialized products, such as chemicals, machinery, or medicines. In addition to preparing cost estimates and negotiating sales, technical sales reps often travel to meet with customers, make sales, and offer training. Therefore, travel is a must and so too are excellent communication and people skills. Lastly, custom service reps have the ability to reach higher income levels because of bonuses that are linked to customer sales that are generated during a specific period of time..
